University tuition may increase 7 percent

UNO students may pay more to attend the university next fall if the state legislature approves a budget proposal submitted by the NU Board of Regents.

At their last board meeting, the regents voted to ask the legislature to appropriate a NU budget of $156.3 million. The tuition increase was included in that proposal.

In addition to the proposed 7 percent increase in tuition, graduate students would be required to pay another $2 per credit hour if the proposal is approved.

For the past few years, tuition for the NU system has increased annually, usually at a rate near 10 percent.

However, the 7 percent increase proposed for the 1983-84 academic year is "smaller than in the past few years because of inflation," according to Gary Carrico, vice chancellor of business and finance.

Carrico said the university decided to decrease the amount of increase because of the effects of inflation on the economy, and the inability of students to pay higher tuition rates.

The legislature will decide sometime next spring whether to accept or reject the proposal and the inclusive tuition increase, Carrico said.

The budget proposal could be amended or adjusted by the legislature. Consequently, Carrico said, there is a possibility the proposed 7 percent increase "may change," but declined to say whether that change might be higher or lower than the 7 percent figure.

The following is a list of current graduate and undergraduate tuition rates compared to what students would be paying if a 7 percent increase is enacted.

The top figure in each category represents the current tuition rate, the figure below it reflects the 7 percent increase.

These estimates were provided by Carrico.

GPAs increase slightly

Plus grades called 'fairer'

By Bernie Williamson
and Larry Tarkington

After nine months, the plus grading system has resulted in a "marginal inflation" of grades, according to Gardner Van Dyke, assistant vice chancellor for student and academic services. A comparison of the grading system used in the Spring 1981 semester and the new system begun in Spring 1982 shows "a slight increase, less than one-tenth of a grade point," said Van Dyke.

The median grade point average in 1981 was 2.726, said Van Dyke. The median GPA in 1982 was 2.811. Approximately 25 percent of the grades awarded last spring were plus grades, he added.

Plus grading was instituted at UNO after years of debate, said Raymond Guenther, associate professor of physics. Guenther, chairman of the Faculty Senate Academic Standards Committee in 1980, introduced the recommendation for the switch.

He said that plus grading was not recommended "because it was the best system in the world. We picked it to match grading systems used at UNL and the University of Nebraska Medical Center." The impetus for the change was so that people could transfer between campuses more easily, he said.

There had been many attempts to initiate the plus grading system at UNO, but "they had always died when the question came up, 'why be like Lincoln?'" said Guenther. He said the subject had always developed into an emotionally charged debate of why UNO should change just to be like UNL.

The plus system was approved by the Faculty Senate in 1980, but did not go into operation until Spring 1982. In order to comply with the recommendation, UNO had to reprogram computers to record plus grades.

When implemented, there also were concerns by members of the UNO Student Senate that both the A and A-plus letter grades represented a 4.0 GPA. One senator said that the system "penalizes the outstanding student."

In November 1981 the Student Senate approved a resolution recommending that the administration award a 4.5 GPA to students who consistently achieved A-plus grades. However, the recommendation was never adopted.

Under the current system, an A-plus grade has no greater effect on a student's GPA than a grade of A. In addition, a B-plus is worth

Pre-registration possible

By Steve Penn

UNO administrators are studying the possibility of starting a pre-registration system "functionally similar" to the one now used at UNL, according to Gardner Van Dyke, assistant vice chancellor for student and academic services.

Although it may be a few years before UNO students can pre-register, Van Dyke said the administration "has been wanting to upgrade the registration system for some time."

Toward that end the university switched to an entry ticket system last spring which "has eliminated a lot of lines," according to Richard Hoover, vice chancellor for educational and student services.

Van Dyke said he thinks a pre-registration system would "better represent student demand" for courses.

In addition to making university registration smoother and more efficient, Van Dyke said, a pre-registration system would "improve record-keeping functions, admissions, transcripts, grading, and student accounts."

Van Dyke said the pre-registration system is in the "very initial stages of planning."

Students buy old books, pass up 'non-essentials'

By Jean Patterson

Students are holding on to their dollars longer and tighter than ever before, according to Dan Gleason, assistant manager of the UNO Bookstore.

Although overall sales at the bookstore are averaging about the same as in years past, Gleason said, the buying habits of students are changing.

More students are buying one book at a time and spreading purchases out over the semester rather than buying them all at once, Gleason said. Sales of non-essential items such as jackets and T-shirts have slowed, while sales of used books have increased tremendously, he added.

Gleason couldn't supply precise figures on the increased demand for used books, but he did say that purchases of used books have nearly doubled during the past two years. "We can't buy enough used books," he said.

They are a bargain for both the students and the bookstore, Gleason added.

Most new books are sold at 10 to 20 percent above the wholesale price. Used books can be purchased from students or book wholesalers at half the original price, then marked up to 40 percent above cost and still be less expensive than new books, said Gleason.

For example, a new book which sold for $20 wholesale would cost $24 retail, assuming a 20 percent mark-up. If that same book were bought back for $12 (half-price) and then marked up 40 percent, it would cost the student $16.80.

In this example, by buying the used book, the student saves 16 percent while the bookstore gains 20 percent more profit on the sale. The bookstore would make $4.80 on the used book compared to $4 on the new book.

This helps the UNO Bookstore to show a profit, while "most other institution-owned stores just try to break even," said Gleason.

However, he added that the profit obtained from the sale of books is "marginal." He said that much of the bookstore's profits are earned on the non-essential items which are often sold at 40 to 50 percent above cost.

"We've definitely gone down in sales of soft-good (non-essential) items," said Gleason.

According to Don Skeahan, director of the Student Center, where the bookstore is located, the bookstore is affected by the economy "just like any other (retail) operation. People are just exercising their options better."

The bookstore is merely experiencing the effects of cautious consumers in a tight economy, said Skeahan. Students living with parents and those living alone are being more cautious with their spending money, he added.

Weekend Warriors

From tents to toboggans, the venture center rents just about anything and also sponsors several excursions per semester.

The center will sponsor a weekend bicycle trip along the Missouri River Oct. 16 and 17. The Weekend trip includes visits to Fort Atkinson State Park, the De Soto Bend Wildlife Refuge and the museum of the Steamboat "Bertrand." The cost of the trip is $20 and will be limited to 15 people on a first-come basis.

The cost pays for food, bicycle repair equipment, guides, insurance and camping gear.

For more information, call Campus Recreation at 554-2539.

UNO students are buying more used books

Skeahan said that while there is a decrease in sales of non-essential items, there still has been an overall increase in sales volume.

According to figures supplied by Gary Carrico, vice chancellor of business and finance, the total sales at the bookstore from July 1981 through June 1982 were $2,466,356. That compares to sales of $2,312,267 during the period starting in July 1980 and ending in June 1981. Sales were $2,066,498 in 1979. According to these figures, said Carrico, total sales appear to be increasing.

Total sales have increased, said Skeahan, because "bookstore revenue is geared to credit hour production." Bookstore sales are directly related to the total credit hour enrollment at UNO, he said.

The total number of credit hours at UNO has been steadily increasing, according to figures supplied by Gardner Van Dyke, assistant vice chancellor for student academic services. Students enrolled for a total of 138,992 credit hours in the Fall 1980 semester, 140,213 credit hours in Fall 1981 and 140,954 credit hours in Fall 1982.

As the total number of credit hours increase, the number of books sold will also increase, said Skeahan.

Meanwhile, Gleason is taking action to alleviate the effects of reduced spending on the non-essentials.

Gleason said inventories of some items will be reduced. "We can't tie up inventory money as inventory. If something is just sitting on the shelf, we're not making money," he said.

Van Dyke: Improve system

However he said he doubts whether the university will switch to a pre-registration system in the immediate future. "It's hard to know until we take it out to bid."

Before the university can even think about initiating such a system, Van Dyke said, UNO administrators will have to examine the computer packages offered by various vendors. He explained that the university would have to install a new computer program, or "software" package to accommodate a pre-registration system.

The issue of pre-registration also was discussed in the academic affairs subcommittee at the Sept. 10 Board of Regents meeting.

Regents James Moylan and Edward

Schwartzkopf expressed support for the idea. "We ought to look at the possibilities," said Moylan, adding that "the time has come."

Schwartzkopf said he also supports the idea. Alluding to the problems involved with switching to the computer system, he said, "We ought to be able to figure this out."

UNO Chancellor Del Weber also said he supports a pre-registration system. "It would be the best way to get the most efficient use of the staff, but we don't (currently) have the computer capability," he said.

Van Dyke said UNO will continue to explore the possibility of a pre-registration system, and that he hopes a decision can be made "as soon as possible."

Grade inflation 'marginal'

3.5 grade points; a B is 3 points; C-plus is 2.5; C, 2 points; D-plus, 1.5; and a D, 1 point. A grade of F is still worth no points.

According to Kent Kirwan, chairman of the UNO political science department and present chairman of the academic standards committee, the plus system will prove to be more accurate than the old system. "The more base points (grades available) you have, the fairer you (professors) can be," he added.

Guenther said that during discussions of the system, the faculty senators were concerned about grade inflation possibly cheapening the credits students earned.

He also said that he is concerned that the system could conceivably work against students. "A lot of times if a student was two points below the cut-off, they would've been given the A." Under the new system, they are given a B-plus.

Decisions in such matters are still left up to the individual instructors.

"I hope this thing is going the way it was supposed to," said Guenther. "I hope it was not a mistake."

UNO Iranian group denounces Khomeini

By Steve Penn

Claiming they "support a guerrilla organization," several UNO students are mounting a campaign to denounce and discredit the Islamic regime of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini in Iran.

The students, members of an official campus organization called the Iranian Students Association, have set up a booth on the second floor of the Student Center to distribute and sell informational materials supportive of their cause.

The purpose of the ISA is "to get financial and political support from U.S. citizens," according to a source who asked that his name not be used.

"Sahid" said he wished to remain anonymous because he fears for his life and the lives of his family, which still lives in Iran.

The ISA has been a student organization for about a year and has a membership of 12. However, Sahid said that there are about 3,000 Iranian students who belong to similar organizations throughout the United States.

Sahid said that he and other students with similar feelings plan to return to Iran to participate in a revolution which he said is inevitable. However, while they still are in the United States, Sahid said, the students serve as a support group until they can join the revolutionaries in the "just struggle of the Iranian people."

Sahid said the group should not be confused with a similar Lincoln-based organization whose members also have been handing out anti-Khomeini material to students on the UNO campus during the last few weeks.

Although the Lincoln group is not a UNO organization, it still can distribute material with the help of the ISA, according to William Munson, advisor to student organizations.

"There is a general rule that any viewpoint of an organization can be expressed on the campus," Munson said, "as long as this viewpoint does not substantially alter or disrupt normal campus activities."

The fact that the ISA asks for a "donation" for its publication doesn't matter, according to Donald Skeahan, director of the Student Center.

He said as long as the distribution methods are "reasonable" and the students' right of refusal is honored, any group can disseminate its material on the campus. He said that "refusal is the best recourse if you're not interested in what's being distributed."

The Lincoln group, called the Iranian Student Society, "supports the National Council of Resistance in Iran," said Sahid.

He explained that the Council is allied with the Mojahadeen, a group composed of young people in "constant" conflict with the government. He added that neither the Mojahadeen group nor the ISS is a recognized student organization at UNO.

The Lincoln-based ISS should not be confused with International Students Services, a UNO agency within Student Government.

"We helped them to distribute their papers on the campus," said Sahid, because "we see them as part of our people. We support them, but we do not have common ideas."

Sahid said the ISA supports a revolutionary movement in Iran called the Organization of Iranian People's Fedai Guerillas. Sahid said "Fedai" can be translated as "martyr."

The money the ISA makes from selling newspapers and other pamphlets and newsletters will go "to support political prisoners," Sahid said.

According to ISA estimates, there are more than 30,000 political prisoners held by the Khomeini regime.

The families of these prisoners need help, said Sahid, and the money will go for food and other services for these families.

Alumni use campus 'considerably'

By Sibley George

Almost half of all UNO graduates earn more than $20,000 annually, according to a survey conducted by the UNO Center for Applied Urban Research.

The survey, commissioned by the UNO Alumni Office, was designed to measure the amount of alumni participation and use of UNO educational programs, workshops and conferences, sports events, and campus facilities.

The survey also indicated that 20 percent of the graduates who responded earned more than $40,000, and 28 percent earned between $20,000 and $29,000. Twenty percent said their income was between $10,000 and $19,000, 5 percent said less than $10,000, and the remaining 27 percent did not respond to the question on income, said Dan Devere, assistant director of the UNO alumni association.

Devere said the purpose of the survey was to measure alumni use of campus facilities and programs. This information will be used in developing programs tailored to alumni needs, he said.

The survey was conducted by telephone during November and December of 1981, according to Rebecca Fahrlander, research assistant at the Center for Applied Urban Research. She said the original sample was to include 1,024 people, but some respondents could not be reached. Some declined to be surveyed, or had to be removed from the sample for other reasons, she added.

The final survey included responses from 726 people, and the results were published last April, she said.

Devere said the results showed that programs, services and activities made available through the alumni association were well attended.

The alumni association is a self-supporting nonprofit organization, separate from the university itself, said Devere. "We are dedicated to raising money for the university in any way possible," he added.

Last year, 9,766 alumni donated a total of $290,798 to the association. An additional $307,999 was raised from other sources, according to a financial review published in the Alumni Association's 1981 annual report.

Of the $598,797 raised, 52 percent went to support UNO programs and maintain alumni services such as the William H. Thompson alumni house, located just west of campus. Twenty-eight percent was spent for operating and fund raising expenses, 4 percent was spent to publish the alumni newsletter, and 15 percent of the money was used for scholarships and other programs.

The alumni association granted more than 60 scholarships last year to eligible students who demonstrated academic excellence.

Another service provided by the alumni association is the alumni newsletter which is mailed to more than 33,000 graduates across the U.S., said Devere. A news advisory is also sent to about 16,000 alumni in the Omaha area, he added.

The survey indicated that nearly 90 percent of the graduates read the newsletter "sometimes or often," said Devere.

The news advisory contains information about campus activities in which alumni may participate, Devere said, adding that many campus activities are available for free or at reduced rates through the alumni card program.

An alumni card entitles UNO graduates to use of the library and to student rates or reduced prices for many on-campus entertainment programs, College of Continuing Studies courses, and reserved seating at UNO home football games. Devere said the alumni card may be obtained by making a minimum $10 donation to the alumni association.

Devere said that the alumni survey showed that all of these services are well used. More than 30 percent of the alumni had used the UNO Library within the last year, according to survey results. It also showed that 25 percent had visited the bookstore and 18 percent had visited the Student Center.

Of those polled, 40 percent said that they had enrolled in a continuing education course and 9 percent said they had attended a UNO-sponsored workshop.

Devere said that UNO football was the top sports draw. Nearly 28 percent of the respondents said they had attended a football game last year and 13 percent had attended a basketball game.

One of the main points proven by the survey was that "alumni are putting something into the university as well as gaining from it," said Devere, adding that alumni use of services also benefits UNO. He said the other point proven by the survey was that the alumni association is already doing a pretty good job serving the alumni.

Nuclear freeze issue needs voter support

"To improve national and international security, the United States and the Soviet Union should stop the arms race.

These are the introductory words to a petition that is circulating around the city.

You may have seen one. If so, you probably signed it. If not, you should have.

The people who measure these kinds of things say that between the two superpowers, there is the capability to blow this planet into a billion silent teardrops about forty times.

To our way of thinking, this seems totally out of line. After all, isn't once enough?

The silly one-upsmanship game the U.S. has been playing with Brezhnev and Co. for the last 15 years is ludicrous. At least 10 years ago we both should have stopped. For that matter, we never should have started.

It truly is sad to think our offspring will have to live under a nuclear umbrella. To think they might have to pay the piper for a tune we played out of key in our generation is not something of which we should be proud.

We fully support the courageous efforts of the Nuclear Freeze movement on all levels.

We urge everyone of voting age to support the move to put the freeze question up for vote in Nebraska. Having done that, we urge you to let your conscience be your guide when it comes time to vote. Where you put your X may mark your spot. Permanently.

We applaud the recent endorsement of the Freeze movement by NU football coach Tom Osborne, and state senators Marsh and Wesely. It's time we put apathy to rest and let our collective voice be heard. We want an end to nuclear buildup.

Cowardice charge groundless

Draft resisters commit heroic act

By Richard Meisler

In the old days, the days of the Vietnam war, draft resisters were always subject to the accusation of cowardice. Most of them, I believe, were not cowards. Many came from parts of society in which it was fairly easy to evade the draft without direct defiance and the consequent danger of imprisonment. Yet there was no denying that one effect of their resistance was to increase their own personal safety. Nor could one deny the fact that other young men were taking risks that they sought to avoid. The war was brutal and dangerous, and we all knew of people who were coming home in coffins.

We have, these days, a new group of draft resisters, the young men who are refusing to register for the selective service. Today, however, there is no draft, and conscription is probably not imminent. We must recognize, however, that a peace-time draft under President Reagan is not impossible. His exorbitant increases in arms spending may well require conscription simply to produce enough trained personnel to run the weapons systems.

Principled stand

If a young man were a coward today, he would register for the draft and sit tight. He would avoid the danger of jail for now, and if conscription came, he could deal with it later. Anyone who refuses to register for the draft today is doing so out of principle, and there is no ground for suspecting that he is a coward.

Hundreds of thousands of young men have not obeyed the legal mandate that they register for the draft. It is probably true that many of them have failed to register out of ignorance. They may simply not know or understand the law. Yet the government has publicized the legal requirement widely.

Large numbers of these non-registrants are probably taking a principled stand, and they are doing so in very large numbers. Estimates vary, but at least half a million men have not registered for the draft, and the true number may be over a million. This is far beyond the capacity of the federal prison system. Non-compliance with the registration law has thus reached a level that defies any attempt at true enforcement.

The government has begun to prosecute a few dozen cases. Perhaps the number will reach into the hundreds. One young man has already gone to jail. Others will follow. Why? Why don't these men go to the post office and sign their names?

The answer involves a little history. President Carter proposed draft registration after the Russians invaded Afghanistan. Government studies showed, however, that a simple program of registration would improve military readiness in only the most negligible way. Carter's action was empty symbolism, and it came when he was approaching a re-election campaign. He may have felt that a crisis atmosphere would help him politically.

After campaigning against registration and a peace-time draft, President Reagan decided to allow the program of draft registration to continue. Perhaps he saw that his spending on weapons systems might require conscription. His administration is now prosecuting a selected group of non-registrants, hoping, it seems, that others will be frightened into compliance.

Trivial action

I believe that most of the men who have failed to register are not pacifists. They would register, and be prepared to fight if there was an imminent threat to the security of the United States. Why then are they risking prison by not registering? There are two main answers.

The non-registrants refuse to be pawns in two games. The first is the game of meaningless Cold War symbolism, the main foreign policy activity of the Reagan administration. Registering people for the draft is a trivial action. We know it, and so do the Russians.

The second game is rally-round-the-flag domestic politics. Former President Carter, President Reagan, and their successors will need to find new actors for their political theater. The country's 18-year-old men will simply not cooperate.

The second reason for widespread non-registration, I believe, is connected with the growing antiwar and antinuclear movements. Reality is penetrating our collective consciousness. We are beginning to understand in our hearts as well as our minds that war is no longer possible. We are maturing as citizens of the nuclear age, and we see that it is simply not tolerable to take even the smallest step toward war. Even a minor action like draft registration is seen, in this light, as important and dangerous.

These are the reasons that hundreds of thousands of young men are not obeying the law, and that some of them will spend important years in jail. I think they are good reasons, and I think that those men are heroes.

'I'M REALLY GOING TO WHIP KERREY IN THIS RACE!'

Keck's news conference 'not an act of desperation'

The writer is state chairman of the College Republicans, a former campaign worker for James Keck, and a UNO student.

By Jeff Bohlken

As an editorial writer, The Gateway's Joseph Brennan is permitted to take certain liberties with objective journalism. However, Brennan's Sept. 15 editorial on Jim Keck takes cynicism beyond the bounds of responsibility. It promotes fallacious opinions and neglects factual information that is of value to his readers.

Let me first say that a few of Brennan's points are valid. It is true that Keck undoubtedly knew it would be difficult to unseat incumbent Sen. Edward Zorinsky (although it sure looks like Keck might win now that he has the endorsement of the Nebraska State Education Association), and yes, it is a well-known political ploy of incumbents to avoid controversial debates.

Here is where Brennan's judgments begin to cross the line from informed opinion into baseless deception.

Although Keck's unconventional news conference was undeniably held in Zorinsky's office for publicity purposes, it is not the act of a desperate candidate. Keck, on a shoestring budget, has managed to increase his support by almost 10 percentage points just since the poll that Brennan refers to in his article. Zorinsky, while spending nearly $200,000 raised largely from special interest groups on the East Coast, has managed to slide by some 20 percentage points since he began his campaign.

Brennan ignores the fact that a public appeal by Keck was made necessary by Zorinsky's unreported tactic of publicly accepting debates and then quietly refusing to show up.

If it was Zorinsky's "solemn obligation" to be in Washington when the State Fair Ag-Day debate was to be held, why did he schedule it in the first place? Was it Zorinsky's "solemn obligation" to refuse to debate Keck at the state AFL-CIO convention when both candidates spoke there within minutes of each other? Was it his "solemn obligation" to refuse to be jointly interviewed with Keck for the Omaha World-Herald Special Focus article? Gubernatorial candidates Thone and Kerrey seem to understand the "political facts of life." They both agreed to the State Fair debate and the joint interview.

In any case, because of Keck's public appeal and the attention it has focused on the debate issue, it is unlikely that Zorinsky will back down from the "one crack" at him that Keck may get, the Oct. 15 debate in Grand Island.

How can Brennan be an advocate of open discussion of the issues when he applauds Zorinsky's efforts to avoid just that? He sees wisdom in Zorinsky's political maneuvering. Of course it is wise for Zorinsky to avoid public discussion of his record as a senator. It was wise for Nixon to cover up Watergate too.

And why does Brennan claim that Zorinsky's votes in 1977 are incongruous? How else do you judge whether or not your senator is representing you but by comparing the way he votes with the way you wanted him to? What would Brennan have the two candidates compare? Shoe sizes? Food preferences? Not only are Zorinsky's 1977 votes congruous, but so is anything else that he's done that reflects his ability to represent us as a Nebraska senator.

Brennan says that Keck is a worshiper of Ronald Reagan. While Keck has received President Reagan's endorsement and is proud of it, "worship" is hardly a descriptive term. The two differ on many issues, including defense spending. Keck states from a knowledgeable position that defense appropriations can be cut by $20 billion. Zorinsky, on the other hand, simply scratches his head and says that he can't see where cuts can be made.

Keck is accused by Brennan of using the words "Zorinsky" and "Democrat" as pejoratives. Brennan seems to do the same with the word Reagan.

Brennan's article dwells on some pretty irrelevant points and ignores some important ones. For instance, why is Zorinsky the only U. S. senator to receive a 100 percent rating from the John Birch Society? Certainly that doesn't represent mainstream Nebraska.

Letters

To the Editor:

The problem with UNO is that there are no intellectuals on campus.

For example, the Gateway completely ignored an event of great cultural significance — the selection of Nebraska's state poet. Worse, no one noticed.

To prove my point, I challenge the Gateway to conduct a search for UNO's poet laureate. In keeping with the rules set by the state's search committee, anyone on or off campus, in or out of Nebraska, can enter.

Choose your own judges (of course, I will be the final judge). Good poetry, should you accidentally get any, will be automatically disqualified.

I will be looking for a reply.

Simon seems comfortable with his 'California Suite'

The Upstairs Dinner Theater is presenting a real winner with Neil Simon's "California Suite." The success of the production is due to two reasons: Simon's obvious comfort with the play he has written and a strong, professional cast.

"California Suite" is a three-act play, with each act totally unrelated, except for the setting — the suite of a posh hotel in Southern California.

The first and most serious act deals with the conflict of a divorced couple over custody of their teen-age daughter. William Warren (John Beasley) is a writer who has been doing quite well since his migration from New York.

Review

His ex-wife, Hannah (Margaret Pierson Bryant), is a confirmed New Yorker with a healthy contempt for West Coast living.

It's easy to understand why this pair decided to divorce. Their meeting is rich in acrimony, and perhaps this act of the play is too bitter, too cold, and too disturbing for comedy. That's not to say that the act is ineffective; just somewhat out of context.

The second act is more traditional. Marvin Michael (Don Noel) wakes up and finds himself in bed with a young woman he is unable to identify. The young lady consumed a bottle of vodka the night before and Marvin is unable to awaken her. Naturally, his wife, Millie (Michelle Patterson), shows up.

Noel brings a great deal of nervous, comic energy to his role. Trying his best to keep his wife out of the disaster waiting in the bedroom, he shows true creativity in reciting lies.

Marvin finds himself in a situation he couldn't control and since he is unable to remember the events of the night before, one suspects the relationship with the sleeping beauty may have been a chaste one.

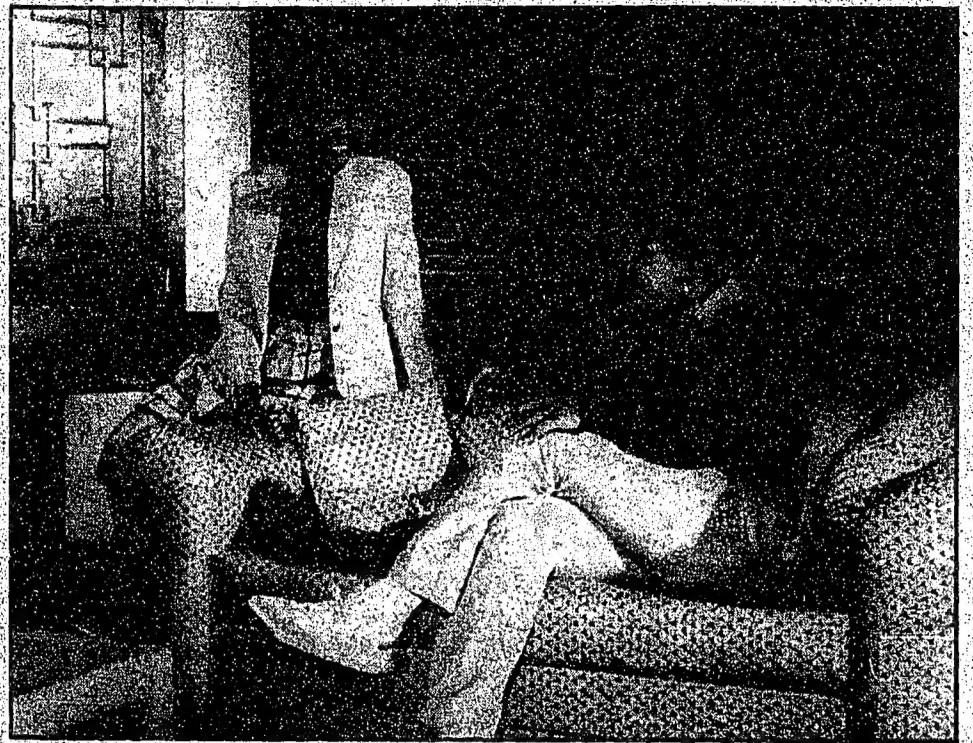

Patterson is also very good. At first somewhat stern, it turns out Millie is a very lovable woman. Simon has wisely written the Michaels as a couple that really care for one another and the love really makes the second act work.

Act three is the hilarious story of two Chicago couples that make the mistake of taking a vacation together. Mort and Beth Hollander (John Beasley and Margaret Pierson Bryant) are angry at Stu and Gert Franklin (Don Noel and Michelle Patterson) because Beth injured her leg when the couples were playing tennis.

This sets off an argument. The Hollanders and the Franklins bring up all the complaints and gripes they both have during the long period of their doomed vacation. The lesson seems to be if you want to keep your friends, don't take them on vacation with you.

"California Suite" is truly quality theater. The cast is first-rate, and director M. Michele Phillips has the production tuned to near perfection.

There are a few problems. The most noticeable is the suite itself. This is supposed to be an expensive hotel but it looks like a shabby dump. The set is so poorly constructed that whenever the bathroom door is closed, the entire wall shakes.

Courtesy Upstairs Dinner Theater

Conflict . . . Hannah (Margaret Pierson Bryant) and her ex-husband, William (John Beasley) discuss their teen-age daughter in "California Suite."

In spite of these difficulties, the play shouldn't be missed.

The pre-show features the Upstairs Upstagers. The group sings songs from a series of Broadway musicals. The Upstagers are fine singers, but show some insecurity as dancers. "California Suite" can be seen Wednesday through Saturday at 8 p.m., Sundays at 7:30 p.m. The play's run ends Oct. 30.

ARMY. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

Visiting professor: Polish government 'collapsing'

By Janet Blide

The Polish people face three possible courses of action in improving their standard of living, according to T. Matthew Ciolek, a native Pole and visiting instructor of anthropology at UNO.

Ciolek said one such action is for Poles to adopt the philosophy that many of their countrymen did during World War II. Many Poles believed an effective way to fight the Nazis who occupied Poland was to become part of the system by getting people into key positions of power, then attempting a revolution.

Another way for Poland to free itself of communist influence, Ciolek said, is to wait for the Soviet Union to collapse.

"One day they'll have to collapse. They will have a series of domestic revolutions; they will have their own version of Solidarity," said Ciolek, referring to the two-year old Polish labor movement.

A third possible course of action would resemble French control of Algeria, he said.

"The feelings that Algeria should be independent were so strong," said Ciolek, "that finally it was much easier for France to move out... than to fight forever with them. And I think the same thing could happen with Poland."

Ciolek was born in Warsaw in 1947. He earned two masters degrees (in archaeology and social anthropology) at Warsaw University. In 1972, he moved to Canberra, Australia, and later earned a doctorate in human communication at the Australian National University.

Ciolek said he then was asked to join the department of experimental psychology at Oxford University. During his career he has published more than 20 papers on personal space, human communication, and non-verbal behavior.

Ciolek said that during his 10 years in Australia he closely monitored events in Poland. He said he is the treasurer for the Canberra branch of Solidarity and a researcher for the Help Poland Live Appeal.

He described the current Polish government as "bankrupt" and on the verge of collapse. Recent reforms have tripled and quadrupled prices, Ciolek said, while salaries have increased by only 10 percent.

"At the moment people still can cope with this because they have some savings," he said. "There are no goods to buy, so they have a lot of cash. But this cash will run out and then what do you do if all you can afford is maybe one kilogram of potatoes a month... People are going to starve."

Ciolek also said that household goods, such as soap and detergent, are rationed in Poland. He said a friend living in Poland told him that he washed a shirt in detergent and that the shirt fell to pieces and also gave him a rash.

Another reason the Polish economy has collapsed, according to Ciolek, is existing trade agreements between Poland and the Soviet Union. Poland is bound by these agreements to sell everything it manufactures to the Soviets at prices dictated by the Russians. Since Poland can't make a profit under this system, he said, the country loses $5 billion a year.

Housing in Poland is another problem, according to Ciolek. He said Poles must wait eight to 10 years to rent a one-bedroom apartment.

In addition, officials in the mining regions of southern Poland have failed to fill the abandoned mines under streets, he said. The result is that whole blocks of buildings have collapsed.

Ciolek blamed the communist system, not government officials, for these problems. He described government officials as "victims" of the system. Ciolek added that these officials usually gain their positions because of allegiance to the Socialist Workers' Party, instead of their ability. Such party loyalty is sufficient to place them in areas in which they have no knowledge. "They sit on their hands and hope everything will be all right," said Ciolek.

The Solidarity movement involves 85 percent of Polish society, according to Ciolek. He said workers, through strikes, have demanded observance of democratic rights guaranteed under the Polish constitution. Solidarity seeks to make the government behave like a government and not like a bunch of inept people.

These goals are the chief aims of Solidarity, according to Ciolek, rather than radical change of the government or laws. He added that strikes have been largely unsuccessful because the government later rescinds promises made in negotiations.

UNO raises volleyball record to 6-2

Lady Mavs trounce Wesleyan

By Roger Hamer

The UNO Lady Mavs volleyball team improved its record to 6-2 Tuesday night with a three match sweep of Nebraska Wesleyan. The Lady Mavs defeated the Plainswomen by scores of 15-10, 15-5 and 15-12.

Head coach Janice Kruger said that although her team won, the level of competition didn't push her players. "The competition wasn't as good as what we faced over the weekend (at the South Dakota State Invitational, which the Lady Mavs won)," Kruger said. "Although some players had a good game, the overall performance of our players was not what we want."

Kruger said she expected her team to be a little flat due to the five-game schedule the squad played last weekend, but that the players put in a good effort.

"We have a taller team than we've ever had before and our hitting is better," Kruger said. "Hopefully, our blocking will get better as the season progresses."

Assistant coach Lucy Axberg had different feelings about the team's performance Tuesday night. "Overall, I was not pleased with our performance except for a few players," she said. "We lost our concentration at times."

"But we have improved since the beginning of the year," Axberg said. "We're more consistent when we play our type of game."

Axberg also said the level of competition left something to be desired. "It doesn't help your team (to play teams with lesser talent)," she said. "We have to play good teams that push us and keep up our mental edge."

UNO was paced by Wendy Melcher, who had five services aces, six points and 29 assists. Added support came from Brenda Schnebel with four points, two assist blocks, one solo block and nine defensive saves, Kristi Nelson with five points, two assist blocks and five defensive saves and Kathy Knudson with four points and seven defensive saves.

The Plainswomen were led by Tami Mau with five assists and Denise Lytle with three points, six sideouts and one service ace. The loss dropped Nebraska Wesleyan's record to 9-3.

"We have some good athletes," Axberg said. "But we need to keep working on our blocking and positioning. Our next few games will be tough."

Kruger said the Northern Iowa Tournament this weekend will show just how good her team is. "The level of competition will be much better this weekend," she said.

Gail Green

Take that! ... UNO junior Connie Janata (right) slams the ball past two Nebraska Wesleyan defenders during Tuesday night's volleyball contest. Janata and her Lady Mav teammates made the Plainswomen their fifth straight victims.

The Lady Mavs meet Minnesota-Duluth this afternoon at 5:45 p.m. and take on St. Cloud (Minn.) and St. Ambrose (Iowa) College tomorrow.

'Sugar Schack' sweetens UNO defensive prowess

By Eddie Vinovskis

His teammates call him Sugar Schack but there's nothing sweet about meeting Phil Schack on the football field.

The starting left outside linebacker for the UNO Mavericks, Schack uses his muscular 5-11, 220-pound frame as a battering ram to leave opposing ball carriers with a bitter taste in their mouths.

The Omaha Westside graduate served his apprenticeship last season as a backup player and also put in time on the specialty teams.

Schack, a junior majoring in business management, has been busy in the Mavs' first three games with 14 tackles, six of them unassisted. He's also broken up a pass and sacked the opposing quarterback twice.

Though relatively satisfied with his performance thus far, Schack said, he is not content to rest on his laurels.

"The mistakes I make I know I can correct," he said. "I want to keep improving and my goal is to be a complete football player."

Schack said that one of his assets is the time he's spent learning the UNO defensive system. "I've gained experience in knowing how I have to respond," he said.

The offensive eruption against Kearney State was especially welcomed by Schack and his cohorts on defense. He remembers well the lack of production in the wish-bone attack of 1981.

"Last year it got kind of discouraging because the defense had to play so much," Schack said. "It's nice to be able to sit back and relax and watch our offense control the ball and put points on the board."

Looking back on the opening loss to Northeast Missouri, Schack said, "we should have been more intense and psyched up during practices but that's hard to do because we have to concentrate so much on studying the other team and their plays."

Schack

"It's tough on the road because the home crowd helps a lot," he said. "We were playing our first game, and it was on grass, but we could have beaten them."

Schack said he is interested in almost all sports. He played basketball and baseball in high school, as well as football. He's an avid hunter and enjoys water skiing.

At Westside, Schack was a defensive end and a tight end on offense, catching several passes from present UNO teammate Randy Naran.

Schack speculated as to why so many Westside football players have been successful at UNO. "Coach Dan Young is a fine teacher and works his players quite hard. He builds a solid foundation that prepares you for college football," he said.

When he concluded his high school career, Schack was recruited by Kearney State, South Dakota State, Northwest Missouri, and some colleges in Iowa.

A number of factors pointed him toward UNO. "They have fine facilities here such as the weight room, the AstroTurf field and the HPER building," he said. "Plus, UNO has a nationally recognized school of business."

Schack said his greatest thrill in sports came as a senior at Westside.

"We were underdogs in the state football playoffs and we beat Creighton Prep and Burke here in Omaha. But we lost the state championship game against Lincoln Southeast," he said.

One professional player Schack said he admires and tries to emulate is Jack Lambert, the wild and crazy middle linebacker of the Pittsburgh Steelers.

Schack also is appreciative of the work of his teammates. "Our players are really great guys," he said. "Our reserves work hard and that's important because depth is vital, especially for road games."

Though the Mavs have a good defense now, Schack said, he added that they can get much better.

"We have a lot of players back from last year but there's room for improvement," he said. "We should be at least 50 percent better by the end of the year than we are now."

Mavs face 'must win' contest tomorrow

Buda makes changes to spark UNO offense

Two tough defensive football teams meet tomorrow when UNO travels to Sioux Falls, S.D., for a 7:30 p.m. game with Augustana.

The Vikings raised their record to 2-1 last week with a 20-12 come-from-behind victory over Kearney State. The Augustana defense limited Kearney to just 27 yards total offense in the second half and twice stopped the Antelopes near the goal line.

UNO (1-2) dropped a 22-11 decision to South Dakota State last week. The UNO defense limited the Jackrabbits to 37 yards in the second half, but the Mav offense was unable to penetrate State's defense. UNO's only win of the season was over Kearney State two weeks ago.

UNO head coach Sandy Buda said his team had good practices earlier in the week and expects an outcome different from last week. "So far we've looked pretty good," Buda said. "This game is a must-win for us since we lost at home. Augustana will be playing their third straight home game, and has won two games in a row." The Vikings beat Northwest Missouri State Sept. 11.

Buda said the biggest problem is deciding on which players will make the trip to Sioux Falls. "NCC regulations limit travel squads to 45 players," Buda said. "We have to decide who goes by the middle of the week."

Buda said the condition of halfback Larry Barnett will possibly keep him from making the trip. Barnett suffered a bruised Achilles' tendon in the first game of the season.

"Larry's getting better each week, but he still has trouble with his lateral cutting," Buda said.

Buda said his team came out of the South Dakota State game relatively injury free and with a healthy attitude. "On Monday, the players were in good spirits," Buda said. "We had four key mistakes last week and they were all made by sophomores. They're bound to make some mistakes."

In an attempt to juice up the offense, Buda has made some changes in the depth chart. Senior fullback Dennis Boesen moves ahead of Brian Nelson, who gained the starting role against the Jackrabbits.

"It would have been easy for Dennis to get down (after being moved to second string) but he proved himself to be a team player," Buda said. "He didn't complain one bit, and played a good game last week." Boesen gained 25 yards in six carries last week.

Other changes include moving senior wide receiver Greg Havelka to slot back and inserting freshman Jamie Quaites at the starting wide receiver post. Don McKee moves from slot back to Quaites' backup, and John Sorensen will spell Havelka.

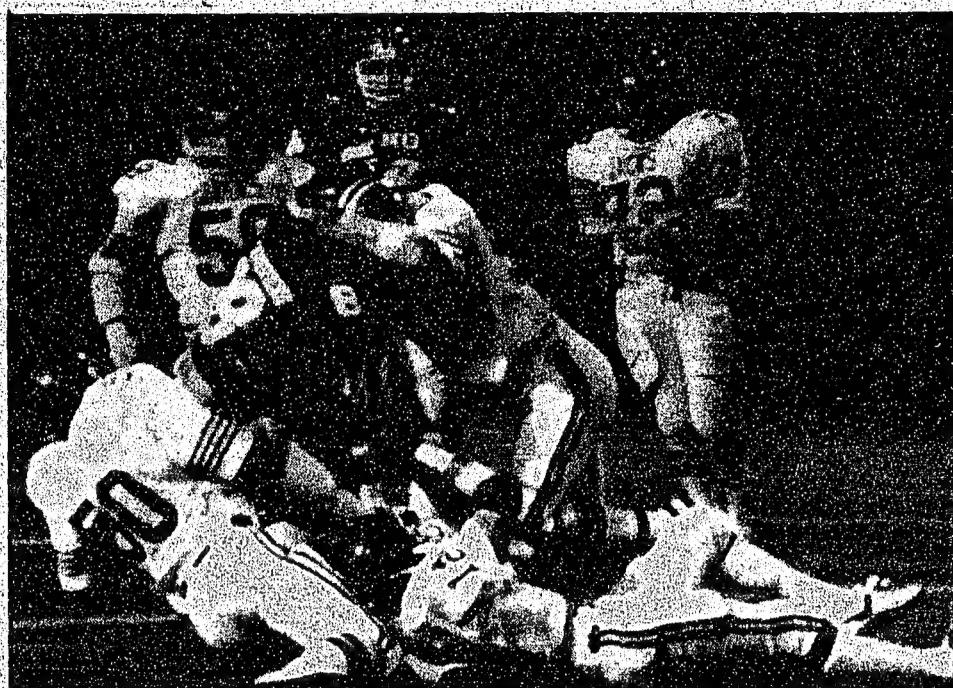

The Viking offense is led by junior running back Todd Hernandez and sophomore quarterback Mike Ross. Hernandez was named the NCC offensive player of the week for his play against Northwest Missouri.

UNO's offense will have to contend with the Augustana radar defense. "It changes things for our linemen," Buda said of the Viking defense, in which 10 of 11 players are in a crouching position, which theoretically allows for quick lateral pursuit.

Buda made no mistake about the importance of this game for his team. "Our backs are to the wall," he said. "By losing a home game, it means we have to win the rest of our games in the conference (for a shot at the NCC title)."

Crunch ... UNO's Kevin Munro (88) found the going tough against South Dakota State's Dave Fremark (50), Jim Smith (12) and John Lewis (93) in last week's 22-11 loss.

Soccer club falls to defending champs

The UNO soccer club completed a three-game road trip with a 3-2 loss to South Dakota State last Sunday in Brookings, S.D.

Imad Rashid scored the winning goal in the second half for the Jackrabbits, defending champions of the Northern State Soccer Conference.

The Mavericks, now 5-1, led twice during the game. Victor Sellinger, with an assist from Bill Jackson, put UNO ahead 1-0 early in the game. Jackson crossed a long pass to Livio Nespoli, who headed the ball in front of the net for Sellinger.

Rashid dribbled through the UNO defense to tie the game for South Dakota State. The Mavericks came right back, as Jackson scored on a head ball after being set up by Dave Young's free kick in front of the State goal.

UNO protected the lead until early in the second half, when the Jackrabbits scored on a breakaway goal.

The Mavericks had 25 shots on goal during the game, but were unable to penetrate the State defense in the second half.

The road trip was a success, however, as UNO won two games last Saturday. In the afternoon, the club beat South Dakota 10-0 in the Dakotadome in Vermillion. Later that evening, in Sioux Falls, the Mavs beat Augustana 5-2.

UNO whipped Nebraska Wesleyan 11-0 at Al Caniglia Field on Sept. 16.

In its last four games, UNO has outscored opponents by 28-5. During that span Sellinger led the team in goals (6) and Jackson led in assists (4).

The club had a return match with South Dakota State at Caniglia Field last night.

AVOR FORCE

When a good friend borrows your car, the tank may not come back full. But the trunk does.

When you get paid back with interest like this, it sort of makes you wish he'd borrow things more often.

Open up a few cold ones and toast a guy who really knows how to return a favor.

Tonight, let it be Löwenbräu.

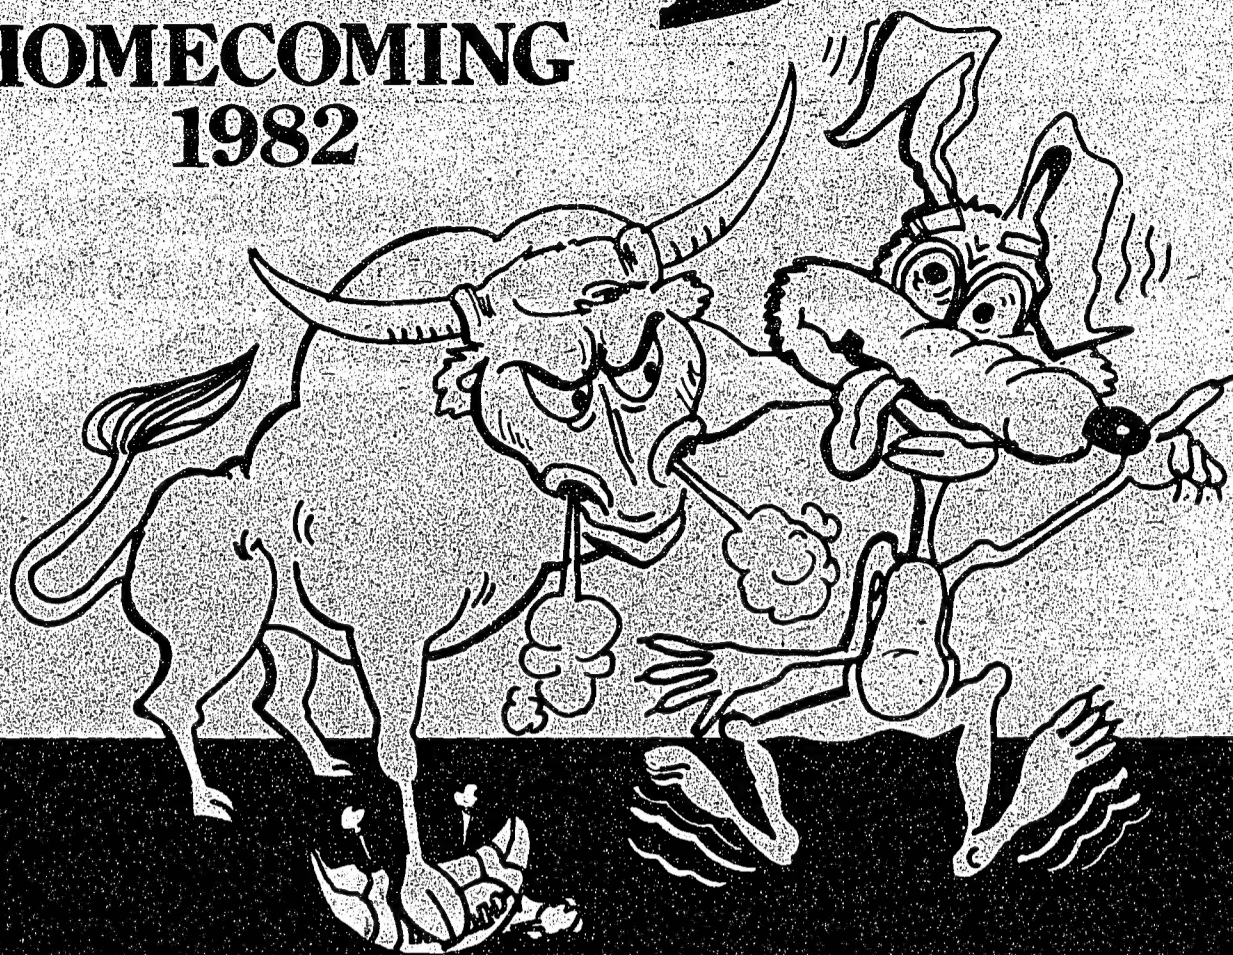

Löwenbräu. Here's to good friends.
